

Why you should lean into how-to content in 2018

Author

Celie O'Neil-Hart

Published

Dec 2017

Topics

Video, Beauty,
Content Marketing

When you hear “video on demand” you might think entertainment—catching up on late-night shows, music videos, and adorable animal clips. But when we asked our audience why they turn to YouTube, we uncovered something surprising: viewers don't just want to be entertained, they're also hungry for how-to and learning content.¹

Why people turn to YouTube

Source: 2and2/Google, “The Values of YouTube” Study, Oct. 2017 (n of 1,006 consumers between the ages of 18-54, with 918 monthly YouTube users). Respondents were asked to choose which platforms they turn to for a range of needs.

Here are a few things we learned from this research, along with some strategies for brands looking to incorporate the lessons into their 2018 planning.

think with Google

Self-directed learning on YouTube

We've all found ourselves in a situation where we have to do something but don't know where to begin. It's at these times that people might turn to YouTube: more than 7 in 10 viewers use the platform for help with a problem they're having with their work, studies, or hobbies.²

More than 7 in 10 viewers often use YouTube to solve a problem when it comes to their job, studies or hobbies.

Source: 2and2/Google, "The Values of YouTube" Study, Oct. 2017 (n of 1,006 consumers between the ages of 18-54, with 918 monthly YouTube users).

Viewers aren't just looking to brush up on skills they already have—they're also hoping to acquire completely new ones. Of the viewers we spoke to, 86% said they regularly turn to YouTube to learn something new.³

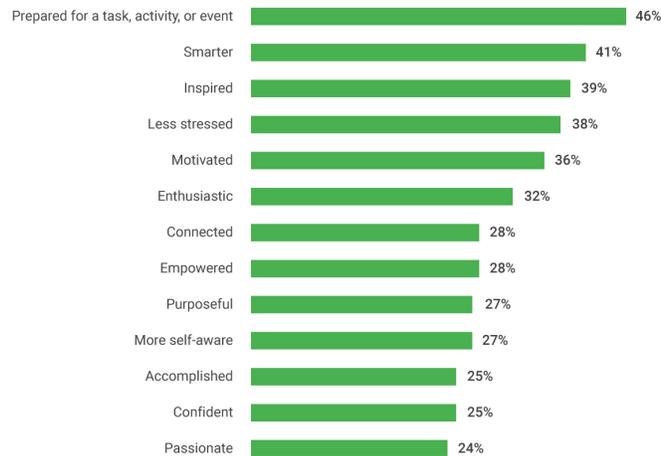

86% of viewers say they often use YouTube to learn new things.

Source: 2and2/Google, "The Values of YouTube" Study, Oct. 2017 (n of 1,006 consumers between the ages of 18-54, with 918 monthly YouTube users).

As well as asking people why they head to YouTube, we also wanted to know what feelings the content triggered.

Given the popularity of how-to and learning content, we weren't surprised when the results came in. People spoke most frequently of feeling "prepared," "smarter," and "inspired" after watching videos on YouTube.

How watching videos on YouTube makes people feel runs high

Source: 2and2/Google, "The Values of YouTube" Study, Oct. 2017 (n of 1,006 consumers between the ages of 18-54, with 918 monthly YouTube users). Respondents were asked to choose which platforms made them feel a range of emotions.

Where ads fit in

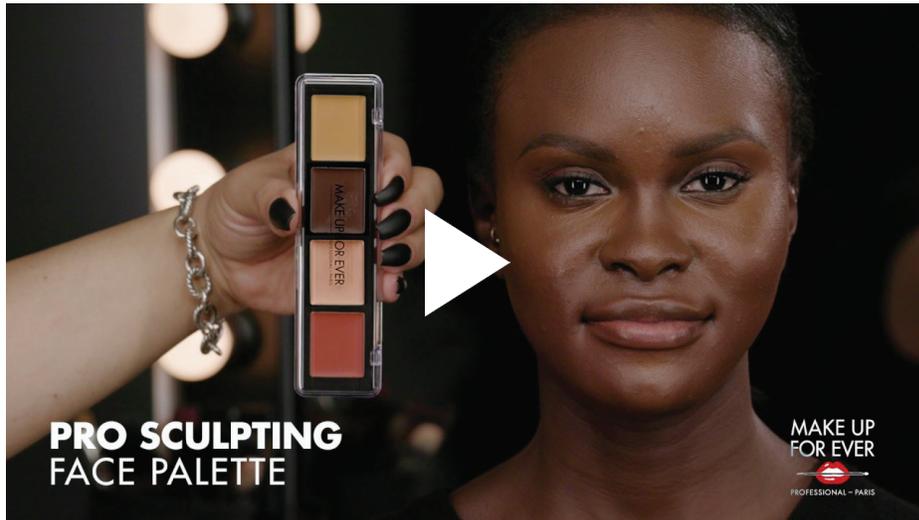

It's easy to wave off how-to and learning content as a tricky fit for your brand.

But when you do, you miss an opportunity to capture your audience's attention in an increasingly overcrowded marketplace. Recent research revealed how-to videos earn the most attention of any content category—even more than music clips or gaming, for example.⁴

So how can brands nail this form of content? Make Up For Ever offers some very interesting lessons. Marketers at the cosmetic brand had been observing the popularity of how-to videos. They'd also heard from women of color how underserved they felt by the beauty industry.

Armed with those insights, they created a how-to driven ad campaign with videos like "How to Highlight and Contour for Black Women," which they served before relevant how-to makeup tutorials.

How To Highlight & Contour
For Black Women w. Renny
Vasquez | Ultra HD Tutorial |
MAKE UP FOR EVER

Rather than creating ads that interrupted makeup enthusiasts' learning experiences, the brand seamlessly immersed itself and its products into them. Make Up For Ever Ultra HD, the product used in the tutorial, saw an overall lift in brand recall of 44% and an 18% lift in organic product-related searches. The brand also increased its YouTube subscriber count by 11% in a single month.

The lesson for marketers? When you prioritize how-to content as much as your consumers do, the results speak for themselves.

Get all the data from this article.

Celie O’Neil-Hart

Contributor, Video Marketing at Google

Sources

- 1,2,3 2and2/Google, “The Values of YouTube Study,” U.S., Oct. 2017 (n of 1,006 consumers between the ages of 18-54, with 918 monthly YouTube users).
- 4 Google/Ipsos, Video Mobile Diary, U.S., 2017 (n of 18,219 total video occasions).